-GERMAN SPERRVERBAND IN EAST

According to CMH's Charles von Luttichau, Sperrverband were ad hoc units hastily formed to protect key points behind the front lines in the event of a breakthrough. These engineer-infantry-AAA troops had no specialized training and were not the builders of the elaborate antitank obstacles. They had no large antitank arty. Instead, they relied on panzerfausts and mines. He seemed to be more familiar with their use in the last days on the Western front, rather than in Russia. See Chap 9 of "Delaying and Blocking Actions," in German Defense Tactics Against Russian Break-throughs: Department of Army Pamphlet No. 20-233, Oct 1951.
